Is your workplace trauma-informed?

Nearly two-thirds of adults in Canada have been exposed to at least one potentially traumatic event. In healthcare—an environment that can be mentally and emotionally stressful—the potential for trauma is high.

Becoming a trauma-informed workplace means taking steps to create an environment that prioritizes safety, trust, empowerment, and avoids re-traumatization or further trauma.

Support Services Appreciation Day is June 26

Support services workers prepare delicious meals, sort laundry, maintain homes, support recreational activities, and much more. It's time to show our appreciation for their role on the care team. Join us on June 26 for the fourth annual Support Services Appreciation Day.

We invite you to participate by sharing your appreciation:

- Submit photos of your support services staff.
- Share a story about how they provide the best care.
- Upload a video celebrating their work.
